

Research article

Empathy before entering practice: A qualitative study on drivers of empathy in healthcare professionals from the perspective of medical students

Yun Ying Ho^{1,}, Laurence Tan^{2,}, Chou Chuen Yu³, Mai Khanh Le³, Tanya Tierney⁴ and James Alvin Low^{2,3}

¹ MOH Holdings, Singapore

² Department of Geriatric Medicine, Khoo Teck Puat Hospital, Singapore

³ Geriatric Education and Research Institute, Singapore

⁴ Lee Kong Chian School of Medicine, Nanyang Technological University, Singapore

* Correspondence: Email: yunying.ho@mohh.com.sg, tan.laurence.lc@ktph.com.sg.

Appendix 1. Valuing empathy as important.

Quotes on valuing empathy	Components of empathy
“So personally I feel er for myself, empathy is important to us... We need to feel before we can actually understand them.”	Valuing affective empathy
“I think replicating the act of empathizing, of being empathise (empathetic) is important.”	Valuing empathy as a whole
“If we all believe that understanding patient’s story is so important so that we can empathize right, then we have to find other means.”	Valuing cognitive empathy
“...it’s so important then we really have to find the time to dedicate to understanding our patient more and really find ways to, to do that.”	Valuing cognitive empathy
“...role of empathy definitely very important, but whether it is being thought of—I mean, it’s—it’s a— it’s a very personal thing, there is no one to say like oh, um, uh, to— there’s no right and wrong for this um, like whether you’re showing too much, too little, it’s very hard to say so...”	Valuing moral empathy

AIMS Press

© 2023 the Author(s), licensee AIMS Press. This is an open access article distributed under the terms of the Creative Commons Attribution License (<http://creativecommons.org/licenses/by/4.0>)